Art Unit: 3739

Applicant's amendments and comments, received February 15, 2005, have been fully considered by the examiner now of record. The current examiner has performed an updated search and is applying new art to the claims. As such, the instant Office action will be non-final.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claim 48 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

Claim 48 depends from canceled claim 47 making the scope of the claim unclear. For the sake of examination, it is assumed that claim 48 should depend from claim 35.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 23-29, 33-44, 48, 49 and 70-75 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Edwards et al (6,402,744) in view of the teaching of Edwards et al (6,712,814).

Edwards et al ('744) disclose an apparatus that includes an alignment device (58) and an ablation probe (66) that is deployed from an aperture (130) in the alignment device into tissue. In particular, Figures 34 and 35 show embodiments whereby the ablation probe (or probes) are deployed from an aperture at one location, withdrawn back into the guiding device, then re-deployed from a different portion of the aperture to create another lesion at a separate location from the first (col. 20, lines 18+). The purpose of the Edwards et al device is to create plural lesions in tumor tissue, which lesions may have various configurations. Edwards et al ('744) teach withdrawing the ablation probe and re-deploying it to create a new ablation lesion, but fails to specifically disclose re-deploying the electrode from a separate aperture in the guiding device.

Edwards et al ('814) disclose a substantially identical device to the Edwards et al ('744) device. In particular, Edwards et al ('814) teach that the electrodes (i.e. ablation probes) may be advanced from selected apertures along the length of the alignment device (see col. 7, lines 12-45). Edwards et al further specifically teach that each of the ablation probes comprises a cannula (92) and an electrode (90) deployable from the cannula (see Figure 13), and also disclose the use of a boss (66,68) for modifying a distance the ablation probe is guided (see Figure 7). Both Edwards et al systems disclose the use of multiple electrodes deployed in various arrangements to make a desired lesion pattern.

To have re-deployed the Edwards et al ('744) electrodes from an aperture different from the first aperture in order to provide a desired spacing between ablation sites without moving the guiding member would have been an obvious consideration for one of ordinary skill in the art, particularly since Edwards et al ('744) disclose deploying an electrode at separate locations without moving the guiding member, and further since Edwards et al (814) teach that the electrodes may be selectively deployed from any desired aperture along the length of the guiding member.
